140 AN UNWELCOME VISITOR

Exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1869

The following are the Property of SIR THOMAS FAIRBAIRN, Bart.

W. HOLMAN HUNT, 1853.

141 THE AWAKENING CONSCIENCE

A woman entangled in evil by a trivial, heedless man, and established by him in a handsome little London house, has her conscience suddenly touched by an accident. Her lover strums the notes of an old song—'Oft in the stilly Night'; and the memory of rectitude reaches her like a ray of light, not to pass away again. This picture was exhibited with 'The Light of the World.'

"I suppose that no one possessing the slightest knowledge of expression could remain untouched by the countenance of the lost girl rent from its beauty into sudden horror, the lips half open, indistinct in their purple quivering, the eyes filled with the fearful light of futurity, and with tears of ancient days."—Mr. Ruskin's Letter to "The Times," May 25, 1854.

Painted for the present owner, 1853–54
Exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1854

W. HOLMAN HUNT, 1851.

142 A SCENE FROM "THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA"

This work was exhibiting when Mr. Ruskin wrote his two letters to The Times, whose critic not only was displeased with the whole motive and scheme of the picture, but had accused it of ill-drawing and incorrect perspective. The public of to-day is happily instructed enough to judge on these points. But it is very probable that the critical irritation was due to the novelty of finding in the art of the time any of that separate character, the personality of the unit, already mentioned. The taste of the time, accustomed to characterless heads, generalised like the trees of the period, was shocked at a way of study that went beyond specialism into personality. The figures in 'The Two Gentlemen of Verona' are as distinct as portraits. Attention should be paid to the action and intention of the hands. Julia's fingers, for instance, play with her ring. The scene is immediately recognised as that of Proteus's conviction and repentance. Julia, in her boy's apparel, has not yet declared herself. The outlaws are advancing with their captives.

This picture was not sold at the Academy. But in spite of prejudice it gained a prize at Liverpool, where it found a purchaser—of a kind. This gentleman patronised art with some difficulty. He paid part of the very modest price in monthly instalments of 10*l.*, and agreed with the painter to 'take out' 60*l.*, not in the traditional sherry, but in a picture! The present owner must be congratulated on the perfect preservation of the work.

"Further examination of this picture has even raised the estimate I had previously formed of its marvellous truth in detail and splendour in colour, nor is its general conception less deserving of praise. The action of Valentine—his arm thrown round Sylvia, and his hand clasping hers at the same instant as she falls at his feet—is most faithful and beautiful, nor less so the contending of doubt and distress with awakening hope in the half shadowed, half sunlit countenance of Julia."—Mr. Ruskin's Letter to "The Times," May 30, 1851.

W. HOLMAN HUNT, 1854.

143 THE SCAPEGOAT

Mr. Holman Hunt was in the East, whither he had gone to paint historical figure subjects, when the theme of "The Scapegoat" occured to him. He took it up, when models failed him for his work at Jerusalem. The Jews who promised to sit failed constantly to come, and the painter found that the synagogue was excommunicating all who should act as models for him—a sentence which was afterwards revoked. Meantime Mr. Hunt went to the narrow South end of the Dead Sea for the solemn landscape of "The Scapegoat." The mountains of Moab, going towards Petra, are in the distance; in the foreground the salt bed of the evaporated sea. The outcast creature is alone, and seems to be near death. The Scripture does not tell us that it necessarily died, but according to the Talmud, everyone who saw the scapegoat threw a stone at it to drive it father into its mystical outlawry.

Mr. H. Hunt has been careful to avoid deciding a definite fate for the victim. There is, however, good reason for justifying the representation of it as a suffering creature. This plea might seem needless but for theological discussion raised on this point. This is the earliest of those studies of oriental light towards evening, of which "The Afterglow" and "The Shadow of Death" are examples.

Exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1856
